

NCRP Responds to Forbes

By Kevin Laskowski

March 4, 2009

It's obvious and Higgins basically confesses that she hasn't read the full report - only a confidential summary. This is akin to a music critic reviewing a band's latest album by reading the liner notes. If she read the full report, she would know that the efforts of Susan G. Komen for the Cure and the Ruth & Lovett Peters Foundation would count toward exemplary philanthropy under our first criterion as they help women and girls and the economically disadvantaged, two groups included among the 11 marginalized communities in the report. Foundation trustees, staff, and anyone interested should judge the quality of this important report for themselves, and not take the word of someone who clearly doesn't have all the facts straight. The full report is available for free on our website: <http://www.ncrp.org/paib?>.

Read the Forbes article here .