

Education Giving

Education Week

November 3, 2010

A philanthropic watchdog group released a report last week pointing out how few of the major philanthropies that support education focus most of their efforts on helping the neediest students.

The study by the Washington-based National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy says that only 11 percent of American foundations supporting education devoted at least half their grants to programs that benefit vulnerable students.

Read the full article .