

Foundations Pledge to Make Donations Work Harder

By Glenn Vaagen

MyCentralOregon.com

June 14, 2011

Several charitable foundations that grant millions of dollars here in Oregon have make a public pledge to do more to benefit those who need additional help. Those groups have agreed to allocate at least half of their grant money to causes that benefit the elderly, the poor and other groups that are struggling. On top of that, one-quarter of donations will be used to end that root causes of social inequities.

... More than 60 charitable foundations have signed the "Philanthropy's Promise" pledge so far this month. To learn more about the pledge, or to see which groups have signed it, visit the Philanthropy's Promise Website.

Read the full article .