

Funding Scarce For Minority Arts Groups

By Elliott Francis

WAMU 88.5, National Public Radio

October 11, 2011

The National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy, a D.C.-based arts funding watchdog, is criticizing the balance of private donations made to the arts for wealthy and ethnically diverse patrons. The NCRP claims billions of dollars in private arts funding is being funneled to an increasingly shrinking, mostly rich, largely white audience. Meanwhile, the funds for emerging art groups which serve racially diverse, sometimes lower income communities is being choked off.

Read the full article and listen to the interview .