

Zero-Based Budgeting, On Steroids

By Andrew Taylor

The Artful Manager

November 4, 2011

... Another recent report suggested a similar theme -- that at least part of the arts funding system, in this case organized philanthropy, was misaligned with the greater good. Fusing Arts, Culture and Social Change: High Impact Strategies for Philanthropy, written by Holly Sidford and published by the National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy (download the PDF), points to the seemingly disproportionate investment among foundations. In language that eerily resonates (and, in fact, predates) the Occupy Wall Street movement, the report says:

...the majority of arts funding supports large organizations with budgets greater than $5 million. Such org

Read the full commentary .